

The Chicago and North Western Railroad constructed the 84,000 square foot, North Western Warehouse in 1932 as the first bonded public warehouse in the region. Built of brick and concrete, it is utilitarian in style with art deco influences. Four open shipping and receiving bays separated by brick pilasters mark the main facade. Six paired windows appear in the upper level. A loading platform fronts the railroad tracks.