

4. In the residence were also three dogs, one of which was large enough for a saddle. In addition there were also three cats in the residence. Dog and cat hair was prevalent all over the floor, which was significant because the couple's two young children were sitting on the floor in their diapers.
5. I also noticed that almost a third of the roof on the back of the house had been torn off and there was absolutely no under layment present. There were a couple of tarps flapping in the wind, however the decking was completely exposed to the elements. I realized right away that the house had to be leaking horribly, especially with the amount of rain and snow that this area has received this spring. I went back into the house and asked Rachel if I could look inside of the room that was under the portion of roof that was torn off. Rachel agreed to let me look.
6. Upon opening the doorway I was greeted with the odor of mold and or mildew. I observed that the roof had in fact been leaking badly, as there was drywall hanging down and standing water on top of several places. I took pictures of this room and the roof itself and closed the door. I asked Rachel how long the roof and room had been like that. Rachel told me that she was not sure, but it had been a while. Rachel was not able to give me an approximate date. I also photographed other rooms in the house.
