TweetMy311 makes it easy to submit 311 service requests using a smart phone and Twitter. It's designed to work with the Open311 API being deployed by cities in the United States and Canada.

Currently, the service only works in the San Francisco metropolitan area. As more cities adopt the Open311 standard, it will be possible to enable TweetMy311 in those areas. You can find out more about the Open311 standard and the initiative behind it here.

TweetMy311 is currently in public beta – it's free to use, but there are no guarantees that it will always be available. To read more about the Terms of Service for TweetMy311, go here.

One of the goals of this project is to learn more about building Open311 applications, and to share that information with developers that want to improve their communities by participating in the Open311 project, or to build Open311 applications.
